

Bulkley "Darkhorse" Democratic Candidate

Five men in Ohio public life are mentioned daily as possible presidential candidates. Chances of adding another Buckeye name to the long list that have gone to the White House from Ohio are bright. A timely series of personality sketches about the Ohio presidential prospects, a third of which follows has been arranged.

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 25.—Speculators over the 1932 presidential picture who omit the name of Robert J. Bulkley, Ohio's junior senator and a conservative liberal Democrat, disregard the result of one of the strangest senatorial elections in the history of Ohio.

It was that election in 1931, which definitely stamped the two-fisted Cleveland gentleman as a "dark horse" candidate for the Democratic nomination for president.

STAMPEDED DRY
Running as a wet in a state which first housed the anti-saloon league and as a Democrat in a state normally Republican by 200,000 votes, Bulkley stamped the opposition and defeated his Republican incumbent, Roscoe C. McCulloch, a dry, by a 180,000-vote plurality.

Easy Pleasant Way To Lose Fat

How would you like to safely and harmlessly lose 15 pounds of fat in a month and at the same time increase your energy and improve your health?

How would you like to lose your double chin and your too prominent hips and abdomen and at the same time make your skin so clean and clear that it will compel admiration?

Get on the scales today and see how much you weigh—then get a bottle of Kruschen Salts that costs next to nothing and which will last you 4 weeks. Take one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot water in the morning—cut down on pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—and when you have finished the contents of this first bottle weigh yourself again.

After that you'll want to walk around and say to your friends, "One bottle of Kruschen Salts is worth one hundred dollars of any fat person's money."

But refuse imitations—safeguard your health—you lose fat SAFELY with Kruschen.

Leading druggists America over sell Kruschen Salts—you can always get it at Hamilton & Ryan's.

Bulkley is not seeking the nomination. In fact, he is lending support to the candidacy of Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, a Harvard classmate and considered the leading candidate at the moment. Politicians see a significance in Bulkley's action, citing the fact that if Roosevelt should become enmeshed in a hopeless deadlock with another would-be candidate, he might throw his support to one of his backers, and an Ohioan would be the most likely recipient of any such move.

Bob Bulkley never evades any issue. When he stumped the rural sections in his senatorial campaign he told his listeners plainly why he was wet despite warnings from politicians that he probably would be safer in "gliding over" that phase of his platform. Not only did he admit his opposition to prohibition, but he took time to explain why, and from his surprisingly large rural votes, his audiences were convinced.

DEBATE WATER
Although he hates to deliver a prepared address, Bulkley is master of the situation in impromptu debates with his audiences. His straight-forward answers, given quickly, sometimes almost harshly, have turned the tide at numerous political meetings at which he has spoken.

Bulkley started his political career in the 62nd congress as a representative, nominated and elected by Tom Johnson's machine in Cleveland. He rose rapidly and, during his second term, played a vital part in aiding Senator Carter Glass obtain passage of his Federal Reserve act, often considered the most important legislative achievement of the Wilson administration.

A redistricting of congressional districts cost Bulkley his seat to Robert Crosser in 1914 and temporarily interrupted his political career. Bulkley returned home to the city which has named a street and large office building after his pioneer family and settled down to his law practice.

As in public life, Bulkley met instant success in private enterprise. His most important achievement was the obtaining of an agreement with Canada providing for a greater allocation of Niagara Falls power to Western New York industries. Many thought he was through with public life. He thought so too.

While he was touring Europe a year ago, Democrats, unable to find anyone else, started a "draft" movement to put him in the Senate and it grew over his protests.

SPOKE DAILY
After the primary, Bulkley became enthusiastic. He toured the state in his own automobile and proved to be a "regular house of a man in a campaign," making three and four speeches daily and liking it.

A renewal of his acquaintance with Glass gave Bulkley membership on the powerful Senate Banking and Currency committee at his first session and he continued to climb from where Crosser had temporarily halted him 17 years before, in the higher legislative branch this time.

Physically, Bulkley is a big man, deep-chested and impressive. He is a good handshaker and possesses a genuine liking for people which has helped him immensely. He is a graduate of Harvard Law school and is fortunate in being the son of a wealthy and prominent father.

Obesity Can Be Overcome by Attention to Diet and Correct Habits of Eating; While Methods That Cause Too Rapid Loss of Weight Are Dangerous

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., United States Senator from New York, Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

WHEN a person has an excess of fat, it usually means that too much food is being taken and too little exercise. There develops an amount of adipose tissue that affects the health, or at least reduces the efficiency.

In this accumulation becomes pathological and dangerous. A fat person may contend that he eats very little and yet the pounds accumulate. We are forced to ask him if he selects food that encourages the increase of fat. Is he partial to starchy food and sweets?

Normally the proper selection of a diet will keep the weight practically stationary. All the food taken is intended to be burned up as fuel to maintain the bodily activities. Malt drinks are a danger for malt itself is nutritious, and the alcoholic content furnishes fuel, thus conserving the nutritious elements to store up in the form of body fat.

It is said to see a person of about forty years begin to lose his enthusiasm for work as he gains in weight. Slowly but surely he becomes short of breath and it won't long be before he shows signs of a failing heart. When the scales show steady increase in weight, it is time to discover the cause and find a remedy.

To resort to patent medicines, or to follow a diet which may be suggested by a kind but unscientific friend, is dangerous folly. It may result in serious consequences. The sensible course is to seek the advice of a physician. A thorough physical examination, to find the condition of the heart and kidneys, is the only sure way to determine what diet and exercises can be followed safely.

The treatment of obesity is based first on the destruction of a certain percentage of fat in the body, and second, on the prevention of the formation of more fat. These objects are attained by modifying the diet and by the use of properly prescribed exercises. The exercises must be suitable and regularly followed, and the diet must be adequate to maintain the nutrition of the body.

Attempts at rapid weight reduction—that is a loss of more than one or two pounds a week—frequently produce extreme nervousness and general weakness. There are almost certain to be digestive disorders. Function is disturbed if the abdominal organs prolapse on account of the lack of their accustomed support—the support which the fat has given.

In general terms it is important that fats, starchy foods and sweets should be limited. No great change need be made in the consumption of meat, provided it is not taken in excess. Potatoes and bread may be reduced with safety and even excluded from the diet. Fruits and leafy vegetables should be taken freely.

A Sample Diet
Here is a sample diet which is advised by a noted physician. For breakfast, he recommends one orange or half of a grape fruit; two eggs, not fried; a small piece of toast or a roll, preferably without butter; a cup of coffee, black or with very little milk.

It is wise to take the hearty meal in the middle of the day when possible. For lunch or supper, the doctor recommends a cup of clear soup; a scant helping of lean meat without gravy; a salad, tomato or celery with lemon or vinegar, but no oil; and a small piece of bread with a very little butter.

For the chief meal: A small cup of clear soup; a helping of lean fish or lean meat, such as beef, chicken, mutton or veal, in moderate amount, without gravy. There may be a liberal helping of vegetables, such as spinach, string beans, peas or asparagus, prepared without butter; also fresh fruit without sugar.

It will be seen that this is not a starvation diet, yet it will prove one that should cause proper and safe reduction.

Tigers Play For League Title At Delaware

RED, BLACK PREPARE FOR FRIDAY TILT

Don Hamilton and Bill Hunt To Officiate Important Fray Friday Eve.

The Circleville-Delaware basketball game for the championship of the Central Buckeye league to be played at Delaware Friday will begin at 7:30 p. m., E. I. Gephart, faculty manager announced Thursday.

The local squad will leave here at 5 p. m.

SQUAD IN TRIM
Coach Pete Herberholz' squad is in excellent mental and physical condition for the fray with every man ready to go. The Tiger mentor does not plan to make any change in his starting lineup with Merle Davis and Bill Hegels lining up at the forwards, Carl Purcell at center and Dean White and Pete Stout at the defensive posts. Delaware's best men are Heinlein, Ross and Sell, center and forwards, with Hageman being the star on the defense.

TIGERS DEFEATED
The Tigers will be pressed to the utmost to glean a victory over this Delaware squad. Ery Carlisle's team defeated the Tigers in a contest here by one point several weeks ago. The game was filled with flaws with officiating poor enough that the Delaware coach said the game could easily have been called a draw with neither team victor. At least one other factor didn't aid the Tiger cause in the least.

Announcement was made that Don Hamilton, former Notre Dame man, and Bill Hunt, former Ohio State cage star, will officiate at this important fray. Both men are well known officials, and fair ones, too.

It is expected a large delegation of local fans will follow the team.

The high school girls' team is scheduled to play at Lancaster this evening. Lancaster defeated Miss Rains' team here earlier in the season.

MORE "ALCOHOL" DEATHS

BOSTON.—After 12 years of prohibition, the death rate from alcoholism in Massachusetts is on the increase. The announcement was made by Secretary of State Frederick W. Cook, in revealing the death rate in the state from all causes was the lowest in history. The number of deaths reported by Secretary Cook were 48,739, a decrease of 7.4 from the total for 1930. "Diseases of the heart," said Cook's report, "as usual were responsible for the largest number of deaths. There were decreases in deaths from tuberculosis and pneumonia, while there was an increase in those from alcoholism."

Southern Honeymooners

Surprised by the camera after they had surprised a host of friends and admirers by their secret marriage, Colleen Moore, petite Hollywood star, and her new husband, Albert P. Scott, New York stock broker, are shown outside their hotel in Miami Beach, Fla., where they are spending their honeymoon. They were married at Fort Pierce, a few days after Colleen had arrived for what she declared was merely a vacation.

Last Night's Wrestling

At New York—Karl Pojello, Chicago, threw Lee Wykoff, St. Louis.

Marvin Westerberg, Tacoma, Wash., tossed Pat Riley, Boston, in 15:40.

Casey Kazanjian, Stanford graduate, outpointed Charley Strack, Oklahoma.

Mihaly Orgovanyi, Hungary, won decision over Joe Varga, Cleveland.

Charley Hanson, Seattle, threw Eddie Elzer, Dallas, in 12:31.

At Toronto—Jim McMillen, Chicago, defeated George Zaharias, Pueblo, Colo., two out of three falls.

GILLILAND LOSES

Special Dispatch to The Herald MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 25.—T. O. Gilliland, of Circleville, failed to survive the second round of match play in the annual Dixie championship golf tournament over the Miami Country Club course yesterday. He succumbed to George C. Weiner, of Charleston, W. Va., by 2 up and 1 to play.

Stuart Scheffel of England, co-medalist, scored a notable victory over James West, Miami south-paw, by 1 up. The local player was 3 up at the turn, but Scheffel rallied to garner the tenth, eleventh and twelfth to square the match.

T. Philip Perkins, former British amateur champion and defending titleholder, won a close match from Winfield S. Dav, 16 year old Chicago star, by 2 up and 1 to play. He laid three dead stymies on the back nine.

DENVER.—Denver physicians were puzzled when Frank L. Hays, Jr., 10-year-old son of a fan assistant city attorney, developed appendicitis pains on his left side. X-ray photographs revealed that the boy's appendix was on his left side and his stomach and heart on the right side, a reversal of the usual internal structure. A successful operation was performed.

Any member of the family of Harley Allen, R. F. D. 2, Circleville, is invited to be a guest of The Herald to the Grand Theatre. Call at this office for ticket.

PLAN COACH SCHOOL

A coaching school for Ohio high school coaches will be conducted at Lakeside this summer by two Ohio Wesleyan athletic officials.

George Gauthier, head football and track coach at the Delaware college, will instruct in football, and Ray Detrick, basketball coach, will teach the court game.

The school will begin Monday, June 13, and will last two weeks. Gauthier's reputation as a grid coach is nationwide. His Ohio Wesleyan teams have recorded victories over University of Michigan, Syracuse, Michigan State, University of Detroit, Butler and others. His Ohio Wesleyan teams, over a period of 11 years, have won five conference championships and placed around second the other six times.

Detrick, likewise, is widely known in his field. In his 11 years of coaching, six of which he has spent at Ohio Wesleyan, he has never had a team finish below second place in its particular league. At Ohio Wesleyan his Bishops twice have tied for the Buckeye conference championship and have finished second four other times. At Mt. Union he won three Ohio conference titles.

GOITRE NOT A DISEASE

It has been brought to light by scientific research that goitre is not to be treated as a disease but as a condition due to other bodily disturbances.

Dr. A. A. Rock, Dept. L2, Box 737, Milwaukee, Wis., a prominent Goitre Specialist of 30 years' experience has perfected a different method of treatment that has proven unusually successful. This same treatment is now being used by goitre sufferers all over the country with splendid results.

The Doctor states that Goitre is a condition which grows worse with neglect and recommends immediate attention no matter how small the growth may appear. He strongly opposes needless operations. Dr. Rock is the author of a copyrighted book that tells how anyone may now treat their goitre with his method. He has published this book at his own expense and will send a copy free to anyone interested. Write him today. —Adv.

English Driver Seeks New Mark

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Feb. 25.—"I want to make 260 miles an hour or better."

Sir Malcolm Campbell, daring English race driver, made this declaration today as he announced his intention of going out again this afternoon in an attempt to shatter the new world's automobile speed record of 253.968 miles an hour which he established only yesterday on Daytona's famous ocean speedway.

"I'm not satisfied, even if I did break my old record," Campbell told International News Service. "With any kind of a break I should be able to do much better than that."

In making 253.968 miles an hour, Campbell exceeded his former world's record of 245.733 miles per hour by 8.235 miles per hour. Campbell also broke two other records—the one kilometer and the five kilometers marks. His new world record for the one kilometer is 251.340 miles per hour, for the five kilometers 24.569 miles per hour.

"I'm awfully disappointed," was Campbell's reaction to his record-breaking feat.

"Really, I think I'll do better today if the beach remains in good condition and I can make another try."

Campbell injured the palm of his left hand slightly in driving his powerful car, the Bluebird, yesterday but he did not anticipate the hand would give him any trouble today. He also suffered pains from his head to feet, caused by the vibration of the car.

Sir Malcolm threw the official timers into confusion by the manner in which he raced for the records. In shooting for records he is timed two ways in a southerly and in a northerly direction and the average of the two runs is computed and announced as official.

Campbell announced he would make a trial spin, in a southerly direction, going perhaps 15 miles an hour. Instead, once he got under way in his powerful car, the Bluebird, he could not keep from bearing down on the pedal and he registered the amazing speed of 267.459 miles per hour through "the measured mile."

Returning north immediately and driving against the wind he was clocked at a speed of 241.773 miles per hour for a two-way average of 253.968 miles per hour.

The timers became confused and held up the announcement of his time south. His north was announced first. Then after a delay his time south, which the officials of the American automobile association had first thought was a test run, was then announced. Campbell had crossed them up. It was entirely optional with Campbell, once he was under way in the first run, whether it would be a test spin or an official try.

About the only difference between a hobby and a job is that you get paid for the job.

HUNT CAT'S TORTURER
UTICA, N. Y.—Humane Society officials are making an investigation here in an effort to determine the identity of a person who committed an act of cruelty by placing a rubber band around a cat's neck. Mrs. George Potocki, thinking her cat was taken with some strange malady, called the humane officer, Joseph Blair, when the cat appeared as if it was dying. The officer upon examination found the rubber band about the neck.

HE "SPILLED THE BEANS"
LYNNFIELD, Mass. — When Peter Herrick, 6, broke through the ice of Santa Lake he upset the pet project of his father, Neal Herrick. The lad, who was pulled from the water in the nick of time, had accompanied his Dad and a group of adults to the lake to examine a site advocated by Herrick for a new schoolhouse. Opponents were arguing that the lake would be a menace to the safety of the children when Peter broke through the ice.

Pinchot and Wealth

MULTIMILLIONAIRE Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, at the tomb of that other great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, blamed the rich for the evils of this dismal hour. "How can we be free," he emotionally and dramatically demanded, "when multimillionaires grow fat and multiply while millions go hungry and cold?"

Either he, in a fit of socialism, is begging for an opportunity to scatter his own fortune and that of his wife among the hungry and cold or he resents this overcrowding of multimillionaires' row. He is either a communist or a snob.

Why does this modern Don Quixote scourge his sensitive flesh with the income-tax figures for 1929 when those for 1930 answer his fondest prayers for the welfare of the common people? By keeping-up-to-date in this statistics his big, bleeding heart would be gladdened by the knowledge that the depression is decimating the population of millionaires faster than prosperity increased it. He has suffered in vain.

The Pinchot campaign to "soak the rich" is directed against a vanishing race. When the income-tax figures for 1931 are available he can again imitate his mentor and hero, Teddy Roosevelt, by staging a big game hunt for those fabulous rich men who fatter and multiply in these hard times.

Springfield's Lincoln Day orator might have been a little more accurate, but where is there a presidential aspirant who would stoop to accuracy in the again popular political pastime of baiting the rich?

Scholarships

ONE force for the advancement of knowledge and extension of education, that is, often overlooked by the rank and file is the scholarship. This is easily explained by the fact that few realize that in recent years the scholarship has become an institution of tremendous proportions.

More than 5,000 scholarships, worth more than $10,000,000, are awarded annually in the United States. They are financed primarily by state grants, private endowments, organization endowment and outright gift and are worth from $50 to $1500 each.

With but a few exceptions they are awarded without restriction on the studies to be pursued, and the great bulk of them go to nothing from the recipient in return. Most of them are offered to undergraduates, through the number of fellowships and similar grants for post-graduate work runs well into the hundreds.

In many instances scholarships alone make it possible for serious students to continue their studies and research work. In others they encourage scholastic and scientific endeavor. It is through these mediums that the scholarship endows the country with a fellowship of learned men and women and new addition to the fund of human knowledge.

This is one of the compensations for the concentration of wealth in individuals. For most scholars the recipient and society are indebted to wealth donors. During the years of prosperity when millions were being made daily came the country's bumper crop of scholarships.

Unpressed

TAKING a cue from the auto-makers who are turning out new cars that are factory broke to run at top speed, fashionable tailors have designed their 1932 sensation trousers already "broken in."

There is logic in their reasoning. Why not place the creases and wrinkles where they will be anyway 10 minutes after pressing instead of where they will not survive the first sitting? Why should fashion dictate the impossible when it can so easily decree the habitual?

Making unpressed pants the vogue would deal a disastrous blow to the pressing industry, but think of the employment relief it would bring to the wives and mothers who still press the clothes of the men folk. It would also be a great relief to the job-hunters who find it difficult to keep up the personal appearance over the several months now required to find work.

But why stop with this scientific improvement in men's tailoring? The next step should be ready-to-wear patches and from factory-to-wearer fringes on the cuffs. Both are enjoying an unusual vogue this season.

Maturity is that blessed state in which you can feel respectable without trying to seem tough. Tough women are no more numerous than they used to be. They are merely allowed in public more.

Don't worry about your boy. Most of the big jobs are held by men who were not valetudinarians. Two influences that promise a great future for the Diesel engine

The GAY BANDIT of the BORDER

by TOM GILL

Copyright 1931 by International Magazine Co., Inc. — Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

SYNOPSIS
 In the Mexican desert, a masked rider, his gun still warm, hides in the eschering mesquite as the cavalry rides past. They stop beside the prostrate figure of a man. "Lopez!" they exclaim, and a shiver runs through the group. A jarring laugh bursts down from above, and gazing up they see the masked rider outlined against the sky. Across the border, tall and handsome Ted Radcliffe arrives at Verdi Junction. He is met by a pretty girl who drives him to the home of his friend, Bob Harkness. She leaves without giving her name. While waiting for Bob, Ted goes riding. He rescues a boy yoked beaten by two Mexicans in Paco Morales' employ. They threaten him with the vengeance of their leader, Jito. Later Ted meets the girl acquaintance of the morning at a dinner given by Major Blount of the U. S. Army. She is Adele Morales, niece of Paco Morales, the man of power in Mexico. All eyes turn to Morales when El Coyote, the bandit, is mentioned.

CHAPTER VI

"El Coyote, yes. His chief amusement lies in robbing me. You will hear much of El Coyote, señor. The bandit most famous of the southwest border. Also he does me the honor to be my personal enemy, although I have never seen him. But his raids are almost always against me. Not too freely do men speak of him, señor, for no one knows who are his friends."

"He has friends?"

"Friends? Of a surety. Friends and followers—perhaps powerful ones. He would create a legend, the El Coyote, that he is the protector of the poor and that he steals only from the rich. Bueno! It is an empty gesture, to refrain from plundering paupers, no?"

"Is he American or Mexican?"

"We do not surely know, although I am certain he is American."

Blount's laugh boomed from the lower end of the table. "Morales won't ever admit the possibility that this border thief is one of his Mexican cousins."

The Spaniard raised his hands in a wide gesture. "I am sure he is not. His ways, they are not Latin ways. He has, if you will pardon me, the sudden brutality of the American bad man."

"Has no one ever seen him?"

"Not without his mask, señor. No one, that is, who has lived. We know he carries a white horse and that he carries two automatics at his side. He is one of those rare men who shoot equally well with right hand or left. But all that is what you call hearsay."

Radcliffe leaned forward. "Tell me more about him."

Morales smiled in quiet amusement. "You love adventure, no? Bueno! This El Coyote has gathered a band, and they live somewhere out toward the foothills in Mexico. From there they swoop down on the ranches, plundering them of cattle and sometimes of gold. In two years this bandit king has cost me many thousand pesos and the lives of six men. To me it has been an expensive form of entertainment, and the end—quien sabe? The Mexican cavalry have hunted him, but they are not fuerte—not vigorous. Almost I think they do not want to catch him. Partly they are afraid, and partly do they sympathize."

"Sometimes I sympathize with him myself," murmured the major's wife.

The Spaniard inclined his head. "It is the privilege of your charming sex to be sentimental, señora. But it is not a gift that makes good soldiers. Myself, I have no sympathy. Five thousand pesos I have offered for him, dead or alive. I have promised a thousand pesos for information alone. Listen. I will tell you one little story that happened only last night, and then, señor, you can decide whether we have here a real bandit or not. Just before dawn this morning has it taken place, and the soldiers are still keeping it secret, but I shall tell you."

For a moment Morales regarded the silent group in the candlelight. Then again his thin lips moved. "Two nights ago Lopez, a Mexican rider, offered to guide the soldiers to where El Coyote's camp lay. By chance or treachery the bandits had already learned of their coming and fled. The soldiers got nothing but a few abandoned horses, some blankets and embers of campfire. But they learned something of the bandit's habits. Things that may be of value. Bueno! In any case Lopez had earned his reward."

"Yesterday a little boy came bearing a note to Lopez. A folded paper some stranger had given him in the road, and the paper said in Spanish that before the full moon died Lopez himself would die."

The Spaniard ceased and played idly with a few crumbs that lay before him. "Last night, under cover of darkness, Lopez came to my hacienda. He was leaving, he told me. He trembled. Dios, how frightened he was! There could be no safety for him in all the borderland. I gave him his thousand pesos in American gold." Again the Spaniard stopped, as if sunk in reverie.

"Well," asked the major at last. "What happened?"

"Nothing very important." Before dawn this Lopez is found in the Verdi road, a bullet through his throat and the bag of gold cut open. A few coins lay scattered over the man, as if in contempt. A gesture, no?"

He turned toward Radcliffe. "Such is our border. He has terrorized this land too long, and until the troops of your country will help our Mexican soldiers, I fear we will never get him. But I have good friends in Washington. Each day I am expecting word that Major Blount's cavalry will help drive out this thief and killer."

Across the table from Radcliffe a heavy, red-faced man of fifty was listening intently. He had been introduced as Dr. Price, and in the pause that followed he raised his voice. A singularly pleasant voice, it seemed to Radcliffe, while just a trace of southern drawl. "I could never see why our troops should come into the picture, Morales," he began. "This Coyote is a bandit, technically, and deeds like last night's have an ugly sound. But everybody who knows the border country will admit that if it weren't for El Coyote the little ranchers about here would have been gobbled up slick and clean by you big fellows long ago. You would own the whole border world. As it is, this bandit, if you want to call him that, has so far kept the big fish from eating the little ones."

Morales showed no slightest sign of irritation. "Bueno. But perhaps the big fish believe that for the good of the border country it would do no harm if these little fish were eaten up. Today is the day of efficient things, no? You Americans have taught us that. And it is not efficient for every hundred acres of land to have a ranchhouse and family when I can control half a million acres without all the waste of money that these little ranchers bring. Si, they would have been driven out had it not been for this El Coyote protector of theirs. This country is for great herds of cattle. It has been that since first my ancestors took it from the Indian. It is not meant to be cut up into silly farms and straggling villages. It is a country for the few and the strong."

The major had risen. His wife whispered to Radcliffe, "The time for that big speech has come."

"I have some interesting information for all of you," he began importantly. "It is in regard to this bandit. Señor Morales, you have long wanted the use of my cavalry in running down El Coyote. I'll admit that nothing could have given my boys more pleasure than a little bandit hunting, but that wasn't our job until we got orders to go ahead. Well, you'll be glad to know this afternoon I received telegraphic instructions from Washington to take the field until El Coyote is either killed or driven from the country. I promise you that in one month we will have him."

A gleam of intense pleasure, a kind of animal ferocity, flared for a moment in Morales' eyes. His hands made the motion of applause. "Bueno, bueno! That means battle. It means—" He stopped, and, following his eyes, Radcliffe saw a figure standing in the doorway.

The major's wife touched her guest's arm.

"Don Bob," she said.

Outlined against the dim light of the farther room stood an erect, slender figure in evening clothes. To Radcliffe's watching eyes there was an immense air of repose about the man, a sense of quiet confidence, coupled, just how Radcliffe couldn't say, with a great alertness. His temples were graying. His eyes moved steadily from one face to another. Quietly the man moved to his hostess's chair.

"So sorry to be late." And the voice, when he spoke, was in harmony with the impression he evoked. Clear and eager, and behind it lay that same assurance and confidence his quiet eyes spoke of.

The major waved him toward a seat, but Don Bob had already seen Radcliffe and stepped forward. Unhesitatingly he grasped the youngest man's hand.

"It's good to see you, Ted." With a swift glance he appraised the straight, strong body and nodded in silent approval. "I'd hate to try lifting you on my shoulder now, Ted. The years have done well by you. You—yes, you look like your father, but so much bigger." Again he laid a hand on Radcliffe's shoulder, then passed to his seat.

"There's a separate portion of Hell reserved for late dinner guests," Aunt Clara scolded, as the man took his place at her left.

"Hell enough to know I've missed at least two courses of the best dinner in Verdi. Dreadfully sorry. I made the last three miles from the ranch in ten minutes over that broken-down cow trail." Don Bob raised his eyes to the major. "But what was that impassioned speech I interrupted?"

And Blount, ever eager to pass on his morsel of news, replied: "The United States government, which in my small capacity I serve, is tired of El Coyote's playfulness. Tomorrow the cavalry and I take the field in Mexico."

Don Bob's eyebrows raised. "How can you go hunting there?"

"We'll ask permission from the Mexican authorities to hunt the bandit wherever he goes."

Confidently Morales added: "The Mexican cavalry will give whatever you ask. I can answer for that." With a gesture of dismissal the Spaniard turned toward Don Bob. "Important news, eh, Don Bob?"

the reports of renewed attacks against the Japanese forces in the Harbin area, foreign diplomats conjectured that Russia may attack Japan in Manchuria.

The time was held to be nearly ripe for this, since the Shanghai area has absorbed, or is about to absorb, most of Japan's reserve army strength, with from 60,000 to 80,000 troops ready to be massed in the Shanghai area alone.

With China hitting hard here, Russia would be at an advantage in northern Manchuria, while the launching of a Russian offensive on Japan would serve to add great moral strength to the Chinese. The two countries immediately would be allied against Japan, and Japan's position would become precarious.

NANKING, Feb. 25.—Chinese government officials today denied knowledge of the death of General Ma Chan-Shan, Chinese hero of Manchurian battles, as widely reported in foreign dispatches.

Other sources here, which almost certainly would know of the General's death if he had been assassinated in Harbin, as reports stated, had no knowledge of it.

day warned both China and Japan that unless they ceased encroaching upon Soviet rights in Northern Manchuria, she would be forced to suspend traffic on the Chinese eastern railway there, Exchange Telegraph dispatches from Riga said.

The dispatches stated the Soviet foreign commissariat verbally notified the Moscow representatives of the two far eastern nations that their fighting in Manchuria seriously menaced the half Russian-owned railway, and threatened the suspension as long as the fighting lasts.

LONDON, Feb. 25.—Secretary Stimson's letter to Senator Borah was principally a warning to Japan that the United States would build up its navy and construct fortifications on its Pacific islands if Japan continued to violate the provisions of the nine-power treaty, according to the interpretation placed upon the letter by Washington correspondents to London newspapers.
